Warleggan

Warleggan or Warleggon (Cornish: Gorlegan) is a civil parish on the southern edge of Bodmin Moor in Cornwall, England, United Kingdom. The parish is roughly oblong in shape with hamlets near the church and at Mount. The River Warleggan, a tributary of the River Fowey, runs through the parish, forming its western boundary in places.

Warleggan - Wikipedia

The Honourable Sir George Warleggan, Member of Parliament for St. David JP (b. 1759) was a ruthless banker. George was the second husband of the late Elizabeth Warleggan and the guardian of Trenwith until Geoffrey Charles Poldark was of age. He had two children, Valentine and Ursula Warleggan.

surname Warleggan is the equivalent of coming across a very hungry bear. The Warleggans are phenomenally rich with no intention of stopping their quest for more. And how they do so, as long as it can come under the broad general term of 'business', has no moral or ethical claim on their attention.

Warleggan (Poldark, #4) by Winston Graham

Warleggan The hamlet of Warleggan on the edge of Bodmin Moor consists of about eleven houses a church and a chapel. It was previously known as the most remote village in Cornwall until a road was built in 1953 linking it to the A38. Warleggan is now isolated between the A30 and the A38, almost directly east of Bodmin.

The Parish of Warleggan is a fairly small one as moorland parishes go - only 2,800 acres. It lies between the two very large parishes of Cardynham and St Neot. The boundaries are largely rivers: on the east, the river Dewy; in the south the river Fowey; and, on much of the west, the river with another lovely name - Bedalder.
